Introduction

Forbes defines employee resource groups (ERGs) as voluntary, employee-led groups open to all within an organization that shares a common interest or identity and work to promote diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) within the workplace. ERGs can focus on various diversity dimensions, such as race, gender identity, ethnicity, sexual orientation, disability, and veteran status, among others.

The purpose of ERGs is to create a sense of community and belonging among employees who share common experiences or backgrounds, and to provide a platform for them to discuss issues that are important to them. ERGs are open to all and can also serve as a resource for employees who may need support or guidance in navigating workplace challenges related to their identity.

In addition to providing a space for employees to connect and support one another, ERGs can also contribute to the organization's overall DEI efforts by promoting awareness, education, and advocacy. They can help to raise awareness about issues related to diversity and inclusion and provide feedback and recommendations to the organization's leadership on ways to improve its DEI policies and practices.

Overall, ERGs can be a valuable tool for organizations looking to foster a more diverse, equitable, and inclusive workplace culture, and to create a sense of belonging and engagement among all employees.

In early 2021, an inventory of current ERGs in schools and divisions across Emory was collected. Following the gathering of this information, an internal working group was formed to develop a framework for creating, implementing, and sustaining ERGs at Emory.

To inform this framework, the working group gathered information about current and historical ERGs and affinity groups at Emory, researched best practices for success, conducted benchmarking with other universities and organizations, and collected employee perspectives via an online survey.
Beginning in February of 2022, Emory piloted two campus-wide Employee Resource Groups (ERGs) as a step towards strengthening community and furthering the university’s commitment to diversity, equity and inclusion. The two groups included the Emory Black Employee Network (EBEN) and the Emory Pride Employee Network (EPEN). EBEN and EPEN were selected for the pilot based on survey results from the summer of 2021.

Employees shared that they wanted opportunities open to all where they can network, engage with mentors, make friends and help raise awareness of the value of diversity and inclusion at Emory. With the help of the Human Resources division and the ERG co-chairs, both groups have flourished into vibrant organizations which recognize and celebrate the diverse populations found at Emory University.

In July of 2022, Emory surveyed current ERG members in order to strengthen and grow ERGs at Emory. From the results of the survey, two new groups were created in March of 2023: the Veterans Employee Resource Group (EVEN) and the Emory Latinx Employee Resource Network (eLERN).

eLERN envisions becoming a leader in addressing inclusivity and advocating for the empowerment of Emory's Latinx community's distinct needs.
Next Steps

Where do we go from here? ERG reports are not just about looking back, but also looking forward.

The ERG’s impact is a continuous work in progress. It will be important for Emory to track its progress and make improvements over time.

01  Strengthen and monitor ERGs

Monitor ERG goals, participation rates and employee preferences to ensure these groups are continuing to develop and meet employee needs.

02  Conduct an impact survey

Conduct a survey in Fall 2023 to gather employee feedback on the four employee resource groups that are now in place.

03  Implement additional ERGs

Human Resources plans to add additional groups in the future that are open to all, based on employee interest and organizational needs.
